Dandelion Strong: Celebrating Military Children This April Maj Samantha Davies, 11 FSS/CC

April is the Month of the Military Child, a time to honor the strength and sacrifices of our nation's youngest heroes. Known as dandelions for their ability to thrive anywhere, military children exemplify resilience, adaptability, and unwavering support for their families.

As a mom of four military kiddos, I've witnessed their extraordinary ability to face challenges head-on. My husband and I are constantly inspired by our children's understanding and strength. Their support enables us to focus on serving our country, knowing they share in the sacrifices that come with our commitment. From adjusting to 6 moves and 3 schools to enduring long separations from loved ones, our children embody the values we hold dear—strength, flexibility, and courage.

Military children are the quiet strength of our armed forces—resilient, resourceful, and unwavering in their support. They remind us that service is a family commitment, and their sacrifices fuel our mission with purpose and heart.

This month, the 11th Force Support Squadron is proud to host events that keep military children at the forefront. From the elegance and charm of our Dandelion Ball to the excitement of Spring Fest and the joy of our Easter Egg Hunt, these celebrations are designed to honor their contributions and sacrifices while bringing families together. We also encourage everyone around the base to wear Purple in honor of Purple Up Day on April 15th.

This April, we celebrate military children for their courage, strength, and profound impact on our families and mission. These remarkable young individuals embody hope and resilience.

FORCE DEVELOPMENT

COMFORT ZONE DEPARTURES

MR. WAYNE MCCRAY

Remember the words of Albert Einstein, "Strive not to be a success, but rather to be of value." He is correct in so many regards it is hard to number them all. Essential to our progress is repeatedly leaving our own "comfort zone" to demonstrate our ever-changing relevance.

It has been well observed that the comfort zone provides a measure of safety and laid-back familiarity, but striking a balance between enjoying these benefits and pushing ourselves to discover new things in the growth zone is vital.

It is imperative that we become comfortable with the uncomfortable! This kind of significance has always characterized American pioneers and inventors from the very beginning. They saw needs and filled them; they ran head on into problems, but they would not quit until they had manufactured solutions.

Embracing change, accepting some turmoil, trying new things, pushing the boundaries, changing the scope, and doing life differently than before allows us to create learning opportunities and grow beyond original expectations.
